Craig M. Cogut Visiting Professorship in Latin American and Caribbean Studies 2017-2018

The Craig M. Cogut Visiting Professorship brings leading scholars in Latin American and Caribbean Studies to Brown University to teach and conduct research. Visiting Professors are based at the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies (CLACS) at the Watson Institute for International and Public Affairs. Cogut Professors teach one undergraduate course on Latin America per semester, advise undergraduate and graduate student theses, and give presentations on campus through CLACS or affiliated units. The Craig M. Cogut Visiting Professorship provides a salary, an optional medical insurance package, a modest research fund, and administrative assistance. Appointments are possible for one or two semesters.

Eligibility to take up the position requires that the applicant hold a Ph.D. in any discipline in the humanities and social sciences and be either (1) a foreign national who is eligible to obtain a J-1 visa or (2) a U.S. citizen or resident.

Applications should include: (1) a letter of introduction from the applicant indicating his or her area of expertise and the proposed length of stay (one or two semesters, and preference of semester, if coming for one); (2) a current C.V. in English; (3) the proposed course or courses that the Visiting Professor would like to teach with syllabi in English (though the course may be taught in English, Spanish or Portuguese); and (4) if appropriate, a letter of nomination from a CLACS-affiliated Brown Faculty member.

Materials should be submitted electronically using the following link: apply.interfolio.com/37198.

Applications must be submitted by October 15, 2016.
