I am pleased to present the 2020-2021 annual report for our Center for Human Rights and Humanitarian Studies (CHRHS). CHRHS’s second year was one of steady growth, including new staff, student assistants, and global fellows, as well as a number of new research and training initiatives and collaborations. Despite the strains of the COVID-19 pandemic, we have managed to significantly advance human rights and humanitarian scholarship and education — both here at Brown University and around the world — while also engaging our students and community in innovative programming and events.

Perhaps our most exciting step forward this year was hiring Dr. Alexandria Nylen, PhD as our second full time staff member for CHRHS. In her first few months on the job, Alexandria has already hit the ground running, leading our Program in Civilian-Military Humanitarian Coordination as well as a number of related research and programmatic efforts. This includes our annual Research Symposium and Workshop on Civilian-Military Humanitarian Coordination, held virtually this past September with nearly 100 humanitarian and military leaders. This year we completed data collection for our US State Department funded research on “Civilian-Military Interaction in Conflicts: Best Practices and Perceptions,” including 176 interviews with conflict and disaster-affected populations and humanitarian and military personnel in the Philippines, the Democratic Republic of Congo, and the Syrian/Jordanian border. We also launched two new studies, one exploring coordination between civilian, military, and police agencies during the COVID-19 pandemic funded by the Australian Civil-Military Centre, and another focused on the experience of Afghan refugees evacuated from Kabul by the US military in August. Each of these studies includes support from our Watson Institute graduate and undergraduate students, as well as our global fellows based around the world.
CHRHS also led several important research and training initiatives this past year in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Building on the success of our prior COVID-19 Preparedness and Response Training of the Trainers, we partnered with Project HOPE and the Africa CDC this year to develop a virtual COVID-19 Vaccine Training for Health Care Workers, which we launched in 30 countries across Africa, as well as several more in Eastern Europe and South and East Asia. In addition to these educational activities, we also conducted a novel research study funded by American Jewish World Service titled “Public action and the pandemic: The role of civil society in shaping state responses,” which included interviews with over 60 civil society organization leaders in Brazil, Mexico, Kenya, South Africa, India, and the Philippines, conducted by Brown University graduate students and CHRHS global fellows.

In addition to our scholarly research and educational activities, we continued to build our student engagement programs, supported in part by the William Randolph Hearst Foundation, with the goal of inspiring the next generation of human rights and humanitarian leaders. This includes sponsorship of the Student Clinic for Immigrant Justice, hosting our annual student Hack for Humanity event, and funding paid summer internships for Brown University students with leading human rights and humanitarian organizations. With the help of our visiting scholars Brittany Card, John Hursh, and Agnieszka Raczynska, we also continued our Human Rights and Humanitarianism in Action dialogue series with more than half a dozen virtual and in-person events on wide variety of topics. Finally, we launched a new “Current Emergencies” page on our website to provide the Brown community with up-to-date, reliable information about major humanitarian crises worldwide.

While I am proud of all that our Center has been able to accomplish in its first two years, I know that none of it would have been possible without the tireless dedication of our staff, faculty, fellows, and students, and the significant investment of resources and time from our donors, alumni, and advisors. Thank you to everyone who has supported our efforts over the past two years to promote a more just, peaceful, and secure world.

Sincerely,

Adam C. Levine, MD, MPH

PROGRAMS

Civil-Military Humanitarian Coordination

With generous support from the Robert D. Harrington, Jr. Charitable Foundation, the Program in Civil-Military Humanitarian Coordination leverages existing CHRHS partnerships with the U.S Naval War College’s Civilian-Military Humanitarian Response Program (HRP) and the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (UN OCHA) in order to break new ground within the humanitarian space. This program expands upon the existing evidence base for effective coordination during humanitarian emergencies through cutting edge research, developing new avenues for information sharing between humanitarian, military, and academic communities, and creating vibrant educational offerings for the multitude of actors who respond to crises.

HIGHLIGHTS

CHRHS Hires New Staff Member to Coordinate Program in Civil-Military Humanitarian Coordination

Alexandria Nylen, Ph.D
Civil-Military Program Coordinator

Hired on September 1, 2021, Alexandria Nylen will be coordinating the CHRHS Program in Civil-Military Humanitarian Coordination. Alexandria comes to CHRHS directly from her Ph.D. program in Political Science at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. During her time at UMass Amherst, Alexandria’s research focused on the nexus of international law and U.S. foreign policy. Prior to her Ph.D. program, Alexandria earned a Master of Arts in Peace and Justice Studies from the University of San Diego in 2014.
Research Symposium & Workshop on Civilian-Military Humanitarian Coordination

On September 9-10, 2021 CHRHS, HRP, and UN OCHA convened their second annual Research Symposium on Civilian-Military Humanitarian Coordination and the fifth annual Civilian-Military Humanitarian Response Workshop. Due to the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, these twin events were once again held virtually. Our Research Symposium featured five presentations of recently completed original research studies from a variety of disciplines. This included research on best practices in civil-military coordination in conflict settings; civil-military engagement in public health emergencies; humanitarian assistance in great power conflict; humanitarian leadership in urban emergencies; and humanitarian notification systems for deconfliction.

Research Symposium Presentations

- Civilian-military interaction in conflicts: a preliminary analysis of best practices and perceptions from the Syrian Refugee Crisis in Jordan
- Humanitarian Leadership in Urban Communities: An Exploratory Study on the Role of Community Leaders in Humanitarian Coordination during the COVID-19 Pandemic in the Philippines
- Civil-Military Engagement During Public Health Emergencies: A Comparative Analysis of Domestic Responses to COVID-19
- China and The Future of HA/DR Operations in Great Power Competition
- Humanitarian Notification Systems for Deconfliction: Purposes and Stakeholders

The 2021 Civilian-Military Humanitarian Response Workshop was the fifth in a series of workshops designed to explore current and future challenges in humanitarian response, including disasters and pandemics, complex emergencies, and routine humanitarian engagements. The theme of this year’s workshop was “Civil-Military Coordination in the Next Pandemic.” The keynote panel featured Dr. Mike Ryan and Paul Molinaro of the World Health Organization, Dr. Maria Guevara of Médecins Sans Frontières, and Colonel Gloria Berlanga of the Rhode Island National Guard. Participants were grouped into a series of working groups that met prior to the workshop to discuss and refine an agenda for six major themes within the civ-mil humanitarian space. On behalf of Brown University and the NWC, we would like to thank the R. Dudley Harrington, Jr. Charitable Foundation, the U.S. Department of State’s Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, the U.S. Naval War College Foundation, the Widgeon Foundation, and UN OCHA’s Civil-Military Coordination Service (CMCS) for their support.
“The crucial role of community leaders during humanitarian crises has always been overlooked in both disaster reduction and risk mitigation planning in the Philippines. This project showcased how during the COVID-19 pandemic, when conventional processes for humanitarian interventions were halted by quarantine protocols, the most organic and reliable partners of service delivery for the vulnerable population are the community leaders.”

- Maria Carinnes P. Alejandria, CHRHS Global Fellow

RESEARCH

Civilian-Military Interaction in Conflicts
Best Practices and Perceptions

This research effort which is led by CHRHS in collaboration with the U.S. Naval War College, is funded by the U.S. Department of State’s Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration. Through research conducted in the Democratic Republic of Congo, the Philippines, and Jordan, this study aims to significantly expand and deepen the understanding of civilian-military coordination across different types of humanitarian crises and aid in the development of updated evidence-based guidance for humanitarian and military actors working in close proximity in a diverse range of contexts worldwide. The research team conducted 176 interviews across these three sites with uniformed personnel, humanitarian actors, and community members. The initial analysis of our interviews with Syrian refugees in Jordan was presented at the 2021 Civilian-Military Humanitarian Coordination Research Symposium in September. Full data analysis is currently underway and the findings will be presented during the next Research Symposium on Civilian-Military Humanitarian Coordination in the Spring of 2022.
CHRHS, U.S. Naval War College’s Humanitarian Response Program, Stanford Law School’s Center on International Conflict and Negotiation, led a series of virtual workshops to assess and identify the purposes, challenges, and opportunities of Humanitarian Notification Systems for Deconfliction (HNS4D). The first series of workshops—held in March and April 2021—engaged academic, humanitarian, United Nations, government, and military stakeholders to discuss the purposes of HNS4D and the stakeholders or objects included in HNS4D.

CHRHS partnered with InterAction and Security Assistance Monitor to conduct research on U.S. government security partnerships. The aim is to produce fact sheets on select U.S. security partnerships in specific contexts of concern (where civilian harm has been an issue or ongoing) to inform engagement with various U.S. Government (USG) stakeholders. The project also aims to identify protection concerns and potential measures to shape U.S. partnerships to anticipate, minimize, respond to harm.
RESEARCH

CHRHS conducts and facilitates interdisciplinary research on pressing global human rights and humanitarian challenges. In addition to our core research projects at CHRHS, we annually fund pilot research studies through our Seed Grant Program. This program is designed to stimulate original, innovation-driven research that addresses topics of disaster preparedness, humanitarian response, post emergency reconstruction, and human rights.
Public Action and the Pandemic
The role of civil society in shaping state responses

Funded through a grant from the American Jewish World Service, this research project, aims to systematically document, evaluate, and explain the role that civil society and human rights have played in the response to the pandemic. We believe this is vital for three reasons. First, because most reporting and most academic work focuses on formal interventions and policies, the work of civil society often goes undocumented. Second, our preliminary observations leave little doubt that as much as state responses have been weak and highly uneven, civil society has indeed often stepped into the breach and made a measurable difference, especially for the most vulnerable. Third, we believe there are important policy lessons to be drawn from a better understanding of when and how civil society can either prod and/or complement public action.

This study is a multi-country — Brazil, Mexico, South Africa, Kenya, India, Philippines — qualitative data collection project that has three phases: Mapping and documenting the constellation of civil society actors who have played a key role in the pandemic response; Key informant interviews from selected CSOs; and Comparative analysis across the selected cases to determine which interventions have been most effective and what factors explain success or failure.

One particularly striking finding, is how, uniformly across the countries we are examining, civil society groups of varying missions and capacities, rallied to meet the needs of vulnerable groups impacted by the pandemic. Yet, through our comparative lens, we see that the strategies employed and the successes realized by this far-reaching mobilization is strongly shaped by the preexisting structure and opportunities of civil society in a country.

We understand that the development of a more critical perspective of human security permeates the need to expand the listening of peripheral voices. A broader vision of human security requires an increasingly broader dialogue that is representative of the plurality of peripheries that make up the Brazilian social fabric.

Upcoming Research Projects

Civil-Military-Police Coordination during National Responses to COVID-19

This project will conduct a comparative examination of civil-military-police responses during COVID-19 in Australia, United States and New Zealand. The project contributes evidence to a field where relationships, roles and responsibilities, and leadership structures have historically formed through necessity rather than through an institutionalized approach. Exploratory case studies of Australia, New Zealand, and the U.S. will be used to map civil-military-police responses to COVID-19. A mixed method research strategy will collect data via surveys and key informant interviews spanning strategic, operational, and tactical levels of civil-military-police interaction. This project is funded through generous support from the Australian Government’s Civil-Military Centre.

Afghan Refugee Perceptions of US Military

In partnership with the Providence-based Refugee Dream Center, this project will document the personal experiences of Afghan civilians who worked with the US military in Afghanistan, and who experienced the evacuation from Kabul. This research project will serve two purposes: 1) to better understand civilian perceptions of the largest humanitarian evacuation in history, and 2) to evaluate the immediate needs of this population for successful resettlement in the US. Using a grounded qualitative approach, this research will collect data through semi-structured interviews with newly arrived Afghan refugees of all identities.
CHRHS strives to re-imagine the education and training of the next generation of humanitarian and human rights researchers, educators, and responders. In addition to the Center’s core training initiatives, CHRHS provides training seed grants to support the development of new curriculum, workshops, and simulation-based learning, both within existing institutions and as a kick-starter for independent initiatives.
RESPONDING TO THE COVID-19 PANDEMIC

COVID-19 Training for Health Care Workers

A Global Health Worker Training from Project HOPE and CHRHS

In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, CHRHS partnered with Project HOPE to develop and implement a virtual training program for health workers, public health professionals, health care leadership, and key frontline personnel to rapidly scale-up response efforts in high-risk countries. Developed by Brown University faculty, the training curriculum was designed in accordance with World Health Organization standards, best practices, and guidelines. The program teaches and evaluates trainees on COVID-19 core competencies, including biology and transmission mechanisms; infection prevention and control; contact tracing; screening and triage; diagnosis and management; stabilization and resuscitation; health facility operations and surge capacity; and risk communication and public health messaging.

Designed for ease of remote access, the training program was delivered virtually by Brown University trainers and was accompanied by real-time Q&A support. Tailored for each specific country setting in which it was delivered, the curriculum focused on strengthening the capacity of health workers in resource-limited settings. The training utilized a Training-of-Trainers model to engage master trainers and coach new trainers, allowing Project HOPE and CHRHS to quickly build a cadre of competent instructors who are able to train other health workers within their networks to respond efficiently to the threat of COVID-19.

Global Impact

- 5,000 + Master Trainers
- 88,000 + health care providers and frontline responders
- 52 Countries
COVID-19 Vaccine Training for Health Care Workers

Building off the successful roll-out of our prior training of trainers program, CHRHS and Project HOPE partnered again to develop and implement a training curriculum to educate clinicians and frontline personnel on COVID-19 vaccines. Developed by faculty at Brown University, the one day virtual training course is designed to be deployed in low and middle-income country settings where Project HOPE and other responding organizations are working rapidly and sustainably to scale up local capacity for COVID-19 vaccine distribution. Following the World Health Organization’s COVID vaccines guidelines, the training provides critical knowledge about the different available vaccines through a blend of online learning modules, materials for in-person trainings, and direct support to health facilities. Participants also learn about the effectiveness and side effects of all the different COVID-19 vaccines, as well as how to overcome vaccine hesitancy and manage vaccine roll-out.

The initial deployment of the training, which took place between February and June 2021, was done in partnership with the Africa Centres for Disease Control and Prevention (Africa CDC) in support of their vaccination strategy. Through this collaboration with Africa CDC and Project HOPE, the training has been provided to participants across 30 African countries. In addition to the African continent, our trainers have also implemented the training in Central and Eastern Europe, South and South-East Asia, and the Middle East.

Conducted to over 1,500 health care providers across over 40 countries

“We found the vaccine training to be critical to health care workers and policy makers around the world, especially in the time of so much doubt and misinformation. The training was contextual and focused on the vaccines available in the region, and comprehensively addressed hesitancy, waste, vaccine distribution challenges. The participants always asked important questions, and we were able to guide them using the most current scientific evidence.”

Advanced COVID-19 Clinical Management Certification Course for Bangladesh

In the spring of 2021, CHRHS partnered with Health and Education for All (HAEFA), Project HOPE, USAID, and Save the Children’s MaMoni MNCSP: COVID-19 Response Project in Bangladesh to work collaboratively with Bangladesh’s Directorate General for Health Services (DGHS) on the creation of a certificate course focused on advanced COVID-19 clinical management. This online, self-learning, self-Certification Course was developed in line with the Bangladesh’s National Guideline of Clinical Management of COVID-19. The course is intended for the physicians of Bangladesh, working in Upazila (sub-district) Health Complexes, District Hospitals, Tertiary and Medical College Hospitals, Private and Corporate Hospitals, Outpatient Departments as well as for the physicians providing Telemedicine for patients managed at home. A special thanks to CHRHS Affiliated Faculty, Dr. Stephanie Garbern and Dr. Ruhul Abid, for the immense amount of work that went into developing this course.

COVID-19 eLearning Courses

Through partnership with Project HOPE and Disaster Ready, both our COVID-19 Preparedness and Response Training for Health Care Workers and COVID-19 Vaccine Training for Health Care Workers were converted and adapted into an online eLearning course through Disaster Ready.

2021 GEMA Global Emergency Medicine Education Award

In recognition of our Center’s work in responding to the COVID-19 pandemic through the development and implementation of our COVID-19 virtual training programs, the Society for Academic Emergency Medicine’s (SAEM) Global Emergency Medicine Academy presented CHRHS with the 2021 GEMA Global Emergency Medicine Education Award.

CHRHS is committed to training the next generation of leaders by offering Brown University students exciting opportunities to engage with human rights and humanitarian communities. With a focus on action oriented learning, each year we connect students with top humanitarian and human rights organizations through our summer internship program, train and empower students to provide direct legal representation to local asylum seekers through our partnership with the Student Clinic for Immigrant Justice, and our annual humanitarian hackathon - Hack for Humanity - brings together students from all disciplines to develop creative ideas for innovative programs or technologies that could help improve the lives of disaster and conflict affected communities around the world. Much of our student programing is made possible through generous funding from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.
Student Clinic for Immigrant Justice

Through a collaborative partnership now in its second year, CHRHS and the Student Clinic for Immigrant Justice (SCIJ) train students at Brown to provide legal services to asylum seekers and organize for immigrant justice. SCIJ’s training program teaches students an overview of immigration law, the history and systemic issues with US immigration, and skills in community organizing and advocacy so they’re prepared to provide legal services to immigrants. After completing SCIJ’s training program, students work in their own communities with partner immigration attorneys to provide direct legal representation to local asylum seekers. 15 Brown undergraduate students were trained during the ‘20-'21 academic year and an additional 15 are currently going through the program this year.

All students in our cohort are multilingual, and many of us come from immigrant backgrounds. There’s a solidarity and vulnerability that informs the way we interact with each other and with the clients we work with. That’s ultimately what we want: for migrants to have the agency and opportunity to tell their stories in a just way.

– Chaelin Jung '23

As SCIJ’s first Campus Organizer at Brown, I witnessed the power of community. Not only was I able to help students obtain the resources they needed for 10 asylum cases, but I formed strong relationships with Providence-based advocates, laying the groundwork for future victories.

– Andrew Steinberg ‘22
Organized by the Center for Human Rights and Humanitarian Studies, Hack for Humanity is an annual humanitarian focused hackathon at Brown University that brings together students to learn about the most pressing needs in the human rights and humanitarian sphere and develop creative ideas for innovative programs or technologies that could help improve the lives of disaster and conflict affected communities around the world. Over two days in March, 40 Brown undergraduate and medical students across 8 interdisciplinary teams, came together with the common goal of generating creative ideas on how to better respond to pandemics and their associated far reaching societal impacts. The teams worked virtually over the course of the two days to develop innovative programs, systems, or technologies that could improve how we plan for and respond to pandemics. The participating teams focused their efforts on one of four sub-topics: public health; human security; human rights; and violence and abuse. Participating teams interacted with a group of CHRHS faculty and global fellow mentors and attended simultaneous side-sessions in order to gain a better understanding of the core issues associated with their topics. This event was made possible with the generous support from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.
Summer Internship Program

CHRHS fuses education and research to on-the-ground action by connecting students with experts through internships at top humanitarian and human rights organizations. Each year, qualified undergraduate, graduate, and medical students are invited to apply for internships with one of our partner organizations. Selected candidates receive a fellowship award which opens more doors for Brown students who do not come from privileged backgrounds to participate in a summer internship experience. These curated internships are carefully crafted with our partners so as to provide students with valuable hands-on experience and working knowledge of humanitarian and human rights issues and best practices. The funds available for these opportunities are made possible through generous support from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation.

CHRHS provides an intellectual space for faculty, visiting scholars, students, and practitioners from around the globe to reflect upon and evaluate current human rights and humanitarian policies and procedures, while interpreting new understandings of human rights and supporting interdisciplinary research by faculty and students into both the causes of, and solutions for, the most pressing global humanitarian challenges. CHRHS hosts annual conferences, workshops, and lectures around themes such as technology and innovation, humanitarian coordination, and health and human rights that encourage collaboration, best practices, shared learning, cross-regionalism, and multi-disciplinary thinking.
Human Rights and Humanitarianism in Action

A dialogue series at the intersection of human rights and humanitarian aid

Led by CHRHS Visiting Scholars Agnieszka Raczyńska, Brittany Card, and John Hursh, the Human Rights and Humanitarianism in Action dialogue series convened speaking engagements with leading experts to explore the most pressing issues facing humanity and the diverse organizations who are responding to them. We use the term “dialogue series” as it evokes the conversational and inclusive approach of these events whether they were held on-line or in-person. From November ‘20 - November ‘21, seven events were organized through this series covering a range of topics from the protection of health care in war to a discussion on the U.S. asylum system.
