Kim M. Williams, Associate Professor of Public Policy, conducts research on American racial politics and immigration policy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. Her first book, Mark One or More: Civil Rights in Multiracial America (2006), explores the implications of recent and unprecedented changes in the American racial classification system. The book argues that the new system of racial counting is likely to reach deeply into the civil rights agenda. Currently, Professor Williams is working on her second book, Transition: The Politics of Racial and Ethnic Change in Urban America. Williams received a BA from the University of California at Berkeley and a PhD from Cornell University.
